SCHEDULE AND CONTENT

Monday, January 13 — Friday, January 17,

Wednesday, January 15: Three-hour visit to the Prado

We undertake analysis of works of art, not because we mean to copy them, but in order to set ourselves in motion. — Paul Klee

Address yourselves to the masters. Speak to them, they will answer you, for they are still living. It is they who will instruct you.

— Jean Auguste Dominique Ingres

Paintings from the Museo del Prado collection will be the point of departure for exploration of pictorial structure and invention. We will work from reproductions of European art's greatest treasures. Included at the midpoint of the workshop is a visit to the Prado to see the works in person. Mediums will include graphite, charcoal, collage, acrylic and/or oil paint. Each participant will look deeply at one or two images and generate permutations through simplification and abstraction. This rigorous and wide-ranging analysis of images from our painting ancestors will feed our own work and imaginations as we engage with images that speak to us still.

Recommended: start with one image that you would like to work with all week, in various media. Bring a few extra images (postcards, printouts from online, etc.) in case you exhaust the possibilities or your interest in the first image.
